Chrysalis Center CEO Responds to State's Housing Crisis

Hartford, CT - "Our State is facing a housing crisis. More and more families face homelessness every year, due a number of obstacles- lack of affordable housing at the top," said Sharon L. Castelli, CEO of Chrysalis Center in response to the National Low Income Housing Coalition recent report on the high cost of housing.

"As this report shows, Connecticut has the ninth highest housing wage in the country," Castelli said. According to the report, "the average Connecticut renter's income is well below what would be necessary to afford a typical two-bedroom apartment."

"There is a real need not only to fix the gap between income and the housing wage, but to do more. At Chrysalis Center we see this crisis every day on the faces of our clients who are working hard to find a home for themselves and their families. But we need to do more." Castelli said.
